54. It has been argued that "capitalism" entails the production of goods or the provision of services for profit ----. Even though many of these transactions were barter exchanges, this does not mean that profit was entirely absent. It was simply some form of profitable exchange that did not involve money.

- A) By capital we mean not just money but more especially a means of production
- B) As it happens, in a capitalist society only a very small proportion of industrial activity is under the control of the government, and sometimes none at all.
- C) This notion of private ownership of the means of production as a central feature of capitalism should not arouse controversy
- D) This, however, will not serve to identify capitalism as a distinctive system since goods and services have at all times been exchanged with a view to striking a good bargain
- E) However, it is necessary to limit the application of the term "capitalism" to a discernible pattern of social and economic relations

55. The precise health and environmental effects of noise pollution are not fully known. ----. Moreover, sounds of high intensity and long duration can cause permanent damage to the auditory system.

In surveys of British public opinion, journalists typically rank below politicians, lawyers and used-car salesmen as trustworthy characters. And yet we depend upon journalists to guide us through today's rapidly evolving, information-rich "media age". The internet, digital television and technologies as yet unborn all promise to revolutionize how we learn about what's going on, in a world increasingly shaped by the forces of economic globalization. But there is surely no substitute for good-quality, probing journalism. After all, it is the great crusading craft. It is the great support of democracy. In every society, authority - whether government, corporate or pressure group - needs to be constantly and vigorously challenged by an independent press. In every society too, that challenge rarely comes from the right. Indeed, in theory at least, it should come from the campaigning, liberal media.

57. The important point stressed in this passage is that----

- A) the internet will replace the press unless the press improves its standards
- B) the standard of journalism in Britain is particularly high
- C) journalism has a very important duty to fulfill
- D) the importance of the press is very often overestimated
- E) there is no valid role left for the press in the "media age"

58. It is pointed out in the passage that, in general, the British people ----.

- A) do not have much faith in the press
- B) are more influenced by what they see on the television than by what they read in the newspapers
- C) are indifferent to the forces of economic globalization
- D) prefer right-wing to left-wing journalism
- E) equate journalism with democracy

59. The writer of this passage is clearly firmly convinced that the various news-providing technologies such as the internet and television

- A) are very liberal in their attitudes towards human behavior
- B) will presently take over all the functions of the press
- C) already present matters of global importance in a far more convincing manner than the press can
- D) cannot serve the same purpose as an independent press
- E) are being unfairly criticized by a great many journalists

60. – 62. soruları aşağıdaki parçaya göre cevaplayınız.

As one steps out of the busy commercial streets in front of the station in a Japanese city and moves on into the side streets, one often encounters old shops and historic temples and shrines which hint at the former character of the city. It is in the side streets rather than the main roads that the original face of a city is to be found. But even in antique-looking houses in side streets, one can often see that their interiors may have been rebuilt and their fittings replaced in an attempt to keep abreast of the times. This applies in farming villages as well as cities; old-style houses and buildings decrease year by year, and in some cases the changes have been even more radical than those which have occurred in the cities. But although outward appearance and facilities may have been renovated, there has surely been no renovation in the sensibilities and attitudes of the people who live in these new environments.

60. The passage contains a lot about renovation within the old houses and buildings ----.

- A) though many of them are being pulled down
- B) including the decorations of temples and shrines in the main streets
- C) though a large proportion of the interiors have remained unchanged
- D) which are largely situated around the main station
- E) but the people are basically still traditional

61. An interesting point made in the passage is that ----.

- A) the old history of a Japanese city is to be found in side streets not in busy commercial ones
- B) the Japanese villages have completely avoided the city trends of modernization
- C) the character of the Japanese is changing rapidly as a result of modernization
- D) Japanese temples and shrines no longer play a significant role in the Japanese way of life
- E) in modern Japan more and more people are moving from farming villages to cities

62. This passage is primarily concerned with ----.

- A) the pride that the Japanese people feel for their great historic heritage
- B) the economic importance of activities in the side streets of Japanese cities
- C) the contrast in life-styles between the villages and the cities of Japan
- D) the social importance of Japanese temples and shrines
- E) the blend of old and new in present-day Japan

In the past decade the term "internal marketing" has emerged in many companies to describe the application of marketing internally within the firm. This seems to be an area where practice appears ahead of theory. Despite the existence of many internal marketing programs no books, at least in English, have been published on internal marketing and only a handful of articles have addressed this important and emerging area. There are two key aspects to this. One involves the notion of the internal customer. That is, every person working within an organization is both a supplier and a customer. Here we are concerned with getting staff to recognize that both individuals and departments have customers and then determining what can be done to improve levels of customer service and quality levels within the organization. The second aspect is concerned with making certain that all staff work together in a manner that is attuned to the company's mission, strategy and goals.

63. We learn from the passage that as a term, "internal marketing" ----.

- A) refers to the qualifications required of a company's staff
- B) has only been in use since the 1990s
- C) has been extensively dealt with in academia publications
- D) has as yet no practical application
- E) has been in use in marketing strategies for several decades

64. According to the passage one of the aims of internal marketing is to ----.

- A) upgrade the quality of a company's customer service
- B) ensure that there is a continual supply of goods
- C) encourage in-service training for all employees
- D) promote a spirit of competition between departments
- E) increase the number of customers through promotions

65. According to the passage, when there is internal marketing within a firm ----.

- A) its activities will be reviewed at regular intervals and its employees encouraged to make their suggestions
- B) every employee should be instructed as to the company's aims and strategies
- C) the employees are invariably seen to be contented
- D) all the employees are expected to work together in harmony with the company's objectives
- E) there are regular meetings between management and representatives of the employees

The advertising techniques and methods used today were for the most part devised in Britain, Europe and America, and as a new technique evolved in one country it was quickly taken up elsewhere. The practice continues on a worldwide scale. The simplification of the words and illustrations in advertisements has come about as the result of the skill of copywriters, artists and photographers combined with the findings of advertising research workers. Advertisers have found it is often more effective to concentrate on putting across one aspect of their product than to go into lengthy descriptions. They have seized on the truth of the saying that a picture can be worth a thousand words. Some critics of advertising have argued that an advertiser should be content to furnish the public with information about his product and draw the line at persuasion, but in practice the dividing line between informing and persuading is impossible to draw. Persuasion starts at the point where information is first supplied, particularly when, as must happen for reasons of space and time, the information given is selective.

66. As it is pointed out in the passage, advertising in this age ----.

- A) has not grown rapidly more effective in spite of the increased enthusiasm and skill of copywriters and artists
- B) has tended to give more and more detailed information
- C) tends to concentrate on the arts of persuasion
- D) seems to have forgotten how effective an illustration can be
- E) has grown more selective and simpler

67. According to the passage, as new techniques in advertising evolve in one part of the world----

- A) other parts of the world feel under pressure to come up with something new
- B) they rapidly spread to another
- C) the competition for markets is intensified
- D) and are copied in another, local differences disappear
- E) copywriters start to look for fresh inspiration elsewhere

68. We understand from the passage that advertising is generally regarded as serving the dual functions of informing and persuading, ----

- A) though the information supplied is not always reliable
- B) persuasion, however, is by far the more important
- C) however, these two functions are actually inseparable
- D) but the amount of information offered is restricted by lack of space
- E) and this is the reason why advertisements have grown longer

The growth of the importance of libraries in both the social and the scientific spheres has led to a great development in library science and in educational training for the profession of librarianship. In Germany and France requirements for admission to the profession of librarian have been laid down by the state; in other countries where there are library schools and professional examinations, professional qualifications are usually expected though they are not necessary for admission to the profession. The American Library Association, founded in 1876, was the first such association to be established in the world, and has been responsible in no small measure for the advances in library techniques in America and elsewhere. Library associations now exist in most countries; the English Library Association, founded in 1878, holds national and local conferences, maintains an excellent library and information bureau, promotes facilities for professional education, conducts examinations (elementary, intermediate and final) and maintains a register of qualified librarians.

69. We understand from the passage that, as libraries have grown in importance, ----.

- A) the state has, in most countries, taken over their administration
- B) it has been necessary to find separate facilities for scientific subjects
- C) the need to train people in librarianship has been recognized
- D) professional qualifications are everywhere essential for admission to the profession of librarian even in a very junior capacity
- E) library associations have been formed in most countries to ensure that all libraries are organized in the same manner

70. It is pointed out in the passage that advances in library technique----.

- A) have slowed down and are now almost at a standstill
- B) have, to a large extent, been the work of the American Library Association
- C) comprise only a very small part of a librarian's training
- D) are still little known outside of America
- E) are of interest only to the professional librarian and do not affect the general public

71. It is clear from the passage that the English Library Association----.

- A) plays a very active role in the training of librarians
- B) rarely makes any contact with the general public
- C) is almost an exact replica of the American Library Association
- D) is in many important respects very different from its counterpart in the States
- E) has been responsible for the rapid development in library science throughout the world

The art of Leonardo da Vinci, like his character, is full of conflicting tendencies and apparent contradictions. His tireless curiosity, combined with his deep feeling for all living things, led him as a scientist to explore the entire range of natural phenomena, while at the same time a fantastic creative imagination caused him as an artist to transform the results of his scientific researches in a thousand ways. These two elements of his nature alternated throughout his life and explain his restless changes of occupation and the fact that he never devoted himself exclusively to painting for very long at a time. Although in his versatility and scientific interests he is usually regarded as the quintessence of the man of the renaissance, yet some of the products of his tortured imagination are a direct reminder of the middle ages. Even in his artistic output conflicting tendencies are apparent. In the "Last Supper" he reaches the peak of his renaissance classicism, whereas in other works, such as the Anghiari cartoon, his sense of restless movement clearly foreshadows the baroque. Finally, in the "Deluge" drawings, he produces works, which are completely unrelated to European art and suggest that of the Far East.

72. This passage about Leonardo da Vinci puts the emphasis on----

- A) his scientific activities rather than on his artistic ones
- B) his versatility and the apparently conflicting elements in his works
- C) the masterly execution of his "Last Supper" painting
- D) how medieval influences are apparent in all his paintings
- E) how fully representative he was of the renaissance spirit of Italy in his age

73. The writer of this passage offers an explanation as to why da Vinci----

- A) fills his pictures with so much restless movement
- B) preferred scientific exploration to creative painting
- C) had to keep his scientific activities quite separate from his creative ones
- D) chose to paint the "Last Supper" in the high renaissance style
- E) did not concentrate exclusively on his art for any long period of time

74. It is clear from this passage that the writer does not share the commonly held view that da Vinci----

- A) was a lonely, isolated figure who did not share in the activities of his own age
- B) was the greatest artist of the renaissance
- C) should have devoted himself exclusively to his artistic activities
- D) is the embodiment of the typical renaissance man
- E) had a creative imagination but it was stifled by his scientific curiosity

The extension of French as a second or acquired language is particularly striking. This was to some extent the result of military and political prestige, but the virtues of the language itself and French cultural achievements actually played a much greater role. The lead which France took in the 12th century in literature and in other domains made its language a sort of lingua franca of the cultured classes of Europe; and in the 17th and 18th centuries French was cultivated assiduously by the royal courts and the upper classes of most European countries and was written by many non-French authors. But even before the end of the 18th century French began to lose ground, and the movement was accelerated by the revival of national sentiment in Europe at the turn of the century and later by the rise of English under the influence of Britain and America. Many things, however, have found their supreme expression in French; and its precision, beauty and eloquence make it a classical language in the true sense of the word.

75. According to the writer of this passage, French was widely used outside of France ----.

- A) especially in Britain and America
- B) only during the years of France's military and political supremacy
- C) though this was not gratifying to the French people
- D) among all classes of society
- E) largely on account of its intrinsic merits and because France was culturally to the fore

76. It is pointed out in the passage that French ----.

- A) is the ideal language of literature and culture but lacks the definition necessary for the conduct of everyday life
- B) is a language of great beauty and eloquence, but that these qualities cannot be appreciated out of France
- C) was the language favored by many non-French writers in Europe in the 17th and 18 centuries
- D) should not have been replaced by English
- E) has scarcely changed at all since it rose to importance in the 12th century.

77. It is clear from the passage that the spread of nationalism in Europe in the opening years of the 19th century ----.

- A) slowed down the emergence of English as an international language
- B) contributed to the decline in the importance of French as a foreign language
- C) followed the sudden loss of the military prestige of France
- D) was firmly encouraged by a group of non-French writers
- E) was a sure sign that the period of France's lead in cultural matters was completely over

Hans C. Andersen, the Danish author, was born on 2nd April at Odense in Funen. His father, a poor shoemaker, was devoted to reading and thinking, but died when Hans was a child. His mother was a simple, uneducated woman, who after her second marriage sank still deeper into poverty and took to drinking in her old age. Andersen, who loved her dearly, has told her story in "She was Worth Nothing". His grandmother did her best to spoil the boy, who was given to daydreaming. After a very meager education in a pauper-school it was intended to apprentice him to a tailor, but as a fortune-teller had foretold that Odense would one day be illuminated in his honor, his mother permitted him to go to Copenhagen, where he tried to become an actor or a singer, but cut a pitiable figure. Fortunately, kind people supported him. Thanks to the support and guardianship of Jonas Collin, an influential councilor of state, Andersen at the age of 17 was sent to school. In 1828 he matriculated and at once began to write, mostly plays and poems. In the 30s he traveled abroad twice. From 1835 his fairy tales began to appear in installments, and were soon translated into almost all the European languages, and gained for him a world reputation. The full acknowledgement of his own countrymen, for which he longed so much, came much later. But it came at last. He lived to see Odense, his native town, illuminated in his honor as prophesied.

78. We understand from the passage that the story of Andersen's own life

- A) reads like a fairy story
- B) is one of continual hardship and disappointment
- C) lacked intensity and variety
- D) provided him with no materials for the stories he wrote
- E) shows how lonely is the life of a gifted writer

79. It is clear from the passage that the great turning point in Andersen's career----.

- A) with the publication of the story "She was Worth Nothing"
- B) when his father died
- C) when his first poems were published
- D) during his first tour of Europe
- E) when, aged 17, Collin sent him to school

80. It is pointed out in the passage that though Andersen got world acclaim early in his career----.

- A) this did not make up for the fact that his own country never recognized him
- B) he never set foot outside his own country
- C) this only lasted for a short time
- D) his own country was slow to recognize his gifts
- E) his happiest days were those he had spent with his family in his childhood
